This paper argues that while i is a morally reproachable attitude to competition, it is not what competitive elite sport revolves around, and that ii simply is not the essence of competitive elite sport. Simples, if such exist, cannot be understood to persist in the same sense, but then again they can arguably neither be considered processes nor substances in the same sense as compounds. Decision Derrida's later philosophy is also united by his analysis of a similar type of undecidability that is involved in the concept of the decision
