This was followed by the months of Brumaire (from the French 'brume', fog) and Revolution and to set it within the context of the whole of French history (right).

Among the days of the French Revolution, October 13, is not the best remembered, yet, in some ways, the memory of the Revolution is conditioned by its.

In considering the perception of time in modern history, many historians are well-justified to look at the period of the French Revolution as one.

With the French Revolution, everything from the past was cast aside and reformed, including the calendar. It was made logical and revolutionary.
