That is, when the centre was in decline some of the dyadic tributary relations might continue, but at the systemic level the functioning of the tribute system had become unstable. Ming power went into a decline in the midth century and the country gradually lost the capabilities to sustain an expansionist foreign policy. The early Ming set out to construct a tribute system with neighbouring states and polities.

In a path-breaking study that travels seven hundred years of Chinese history. The next book on the review list, Shogo Suzuki's Civilization and Empire is an in-depth historical study that offers an entirely original reinterpretation of East Asia's encounter with the West. Leaders of the Song Dynasty and Ming Dynasty prized military force and shrewdly assessed the strength of China's adversaries. Zhou Enlai.
